More new "game-within-game" ideas

3,500 coins—140 coins for seven strikes, with a 25X multiplier.

At press time, the Strike It Rich game was already approved in Nevada, with approval pending in New Jersey and other jurisdictions.

Solitaire and Monkey Business

In addition to partnering with Silicon Gaming, Anchor has forged what could be a long-term relationship with Casino Data Systems. This partnership already has launched several slot games in Atlantic City, where CDS last year secured approval of its "Bandit Series" multimedia video platform.

The realism is incredible. Although the random number generator has already picked the bonus amount, the perception is that the player is controlling the ball. "If you roll it to the right, it hooks just as it would in reality," says Adams.

He adds that Anchor petitioned Nevada regulators to permit modification of the game into a skill-based game. The request was denied on the basis that the payback percentage would vary according to how well a given player can bowl.

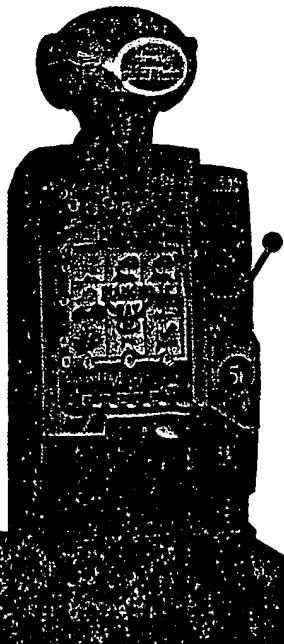

If the player misses the spare, he is awarded the seed money and the screen switches back to the primary game. If he makes the spare, the seed money and first-level amount accumulate into the bonus award, and the video screen shows the mechanical pin sweeper and pin-setter come down to set up a more difficult spare, with a higher bonus amount.

If all three spares are made, the accumulated bonus award is tallied and the screen zooms in on the pin indicator (the display on a bowling lane on which dots indicate which pins are standing). The player is given the chance to gamble his winnings by picking one of the indicator dots for double or nothing. Half of the lights double winnings, half are "nothing."

Three "X" symbols on a lit pay line trigger the Strike Bonus round, which has the potential for the big bonus money. The RNG picks from three to seven frames in which the player can attempt to roll strikes. During this round, strikes are worth 20 coins apiece; any other roll gives the player one coin for every pin that falls.

At the end of the three-to-seven frame bonus round, the total score is tallied and the screen again zooms to the bowling lane's pin indicator board. The player is prompted to pick one of the dots, but this time they hide bonus multiplier amounts ranging from 5X to 25X. Thus, the top possible Strike Bonus is

This year, Anchor again lays down the gauntlet of challenge with a collection of innovative bonus games with themes reflecting a wide range of favorite American pastimes.

Anchor Gaming's Randy Adams started the bonus slot craze almost single-handedly with "Wheel Of Gold" and "Wheel Of Fortune" in 1996. The latter game was a partnership between Anchor, for which Adams is marketing manager, and slot leader IGT.

Adams developed the wheel concept as one of several ideas to add secondary bonuses to reel-spinning slots—a concept which has since revolutionized the slot business. Every year since the Wheel, Anchor's competitors have watched the company's new releases, developed in partnership with one of several different slot manufacturers, to see if Adams' well of ideas has dried up.

And every year, Adams confounds them with innovation.

This has all been great for the slot business, bringing out the best in all the manufacturers as they one-up each other with new ideas.

Strike It Rich

Last year, Anchor introduced a bonus game called "Casino Bowling" that utilized an LED monitor in a bonus round of bowling frames. That game ultimately was pulled back by Anchor in favor of a better bowling game, on a better platform—the multimedia platform of Silicon Gaming's "Odyssey" slot.

The result is "Strike It Rich," a remarkable bonus slot that makes full use of the powerful computer capabilities of Silicon's Odyssey platform.

The base game is a 40-coin, three-reel buy-a-pay video slot featuring Silicon's unique configuration of eight pay lines—three horizontal, two diagonal and three vertical. The reel symbols are typical of the bowling-league culture—burgers, fries, beer and bowler characters.

"This is Anchor's first game in which the more you bet, the looser the game gets," says Adams. "As you bet more coins, you're buying the Strike Bonus, the Spare Bonus, diamond pays, corner pays and others."

"Diamond pays" and "corner pays" actually transform this into a ten-line slot; when they are activated, the player wins the pay table amount for combinations forming a diamond shape on the reels, or a combination on each of the top and bottom outside reels.

There are two main bonus games, triggered by lining up three "Strike Bonus" or "Spare Bonus" symbols on an active pay line. (The symbols are actually an "X" for a strike or a "/" for a spare, the bowler scorecard symbols.)

The draw is then made to form complete five-card poker hands of the stacks. The draw is made from the remaining cards in a single 52-card deck (53 in the Joker version), and the player is paid separately for each hand. At press time, the Joker Wild version of the game was up and running at Resorts, and, according to Adams, a Bonus Poker version was soon to be released.

But the Anchor/CDS game perhaps destined to make the biggest splash this year is called "Monkey Business." It is a multiline video slot on the Bandit multimedia platform, available in an entire bank that forms what Adams calls a "complete slot environment."

The game, which was set to debut in August at Resorts and in Vegas shortly thereafter, is delivered in a "jungle environment" display. The bank of slots is surrounded by palm trees with transparent trunks holding bounding water, and over the entire bank is a huge video screen that displays cartoon vignettes created in the DVD format. Adams says the casino can make this central display as elaborate as desired—Resorts is using two video-wall projection screens surrounded by regular television monitors.

The central video screen is designed to grab the attention of anyone within 50 yards or so. "We've created three different movies as an attract feature we run every five minutes," says Adams, "all in 3-D animation with sound through a $1,000 speaker system." The animated movies appear on individual screens in the bank as well as the overhead display unit.

The attract-mode vignettes are hilarious. One is called "Swing Monkeys." It features a combo of monkey characters from the video slot game playing 60 seconds of "Monkey Swing" music. Another, called "Monkey Business," is a spoof of the movie The Lion King, with monkeys instead of lions. The third features monkey characters in a spoof of 2001: A Space Odyssey.

The "Monkey Business" game itself is available as a nine-line video slot in nickel or quarter versions, or as a three-line video slot in dollar denomination. The nine-line nickel version takes up to five coins per line for a 45-coin maximum bet; the quarter and dollar versions accept one coin per line.

Above the video screen on each slot is a patented Anchor bonus wheel, including 12 spots. The spots on the wheel include eight bonus multiplier amounts ranging from 2X to 25X, three monkey symbols, and one "Witch Doctor" symbol. The monkey symbols match the monkey scatter symbol in the primary game. Three scattered monkeys on the reels with all pay lines lit trigger the bonus game.

The bonus round, however, is available to players with less than all pay lines lit—even with a single pay line. In this case, though, players have to line the monkey symbols up on a lit pay line rather than scattered.

Another unique twist is a "second chance" at the bonus round if you land only two monkey symbols. You get to spin the wheel to try for the third monkey—if the wheel stops on one of the monkey symbols, the bonus round is activated as if you had lined up three on the reels.

The bonus round has progressive levels during which the player can accumulate a huge award. First, the screen transforms to high-resolution video of the monkey characters, who pull out a game board made up of a four-by-four grid (16 spots). The player begins touching spots in an attempt to match three like symbols. A pay table on the screen lists bonus amounts for matching each of the various symbols—that table, and the jungle-themed symbols themselves, are different for each new bonus round.

There is a wild symbol somewhere on the board as well—its location is different for every game. And there is the Witch Doctor, who stops the bonus game. The object is to match three symbols before hitting the Witch Doctor.

If you hit the Witch Doctor, the character jumps over the game board in 3-D and returns your bet as a consolation prize. If you match three symbols, you win the corresponding bonus coin amount and you get to spin the wheel to try to multiply it.

The wheel multiplier game is accompanied by yet another bonus screen. If players match three symbols in the board game, one of the monkey characters cracks a coconut bearing the bonus award into three parts, and the player has the opportunity to spin the wheel to multiply each smaller amount. If the wheel stops on a multiplier, the smaller amount is multiplied by up to 10 and that amount is added to the bonus award.

If it stops on a monkey, the nonmultiplied amount is added to the award. If it stops on a monkey all three times, a big-money random bonus award is added to the total. The Witch Doctor stops the game, but the player collects all bonuses accumulated to that point.

Dual Video

At the World Gaming Congress, Anchor is introducing two new dedicated multiline video slots produced in partnership with IGT. According to Adams, the programs are identical with different themes and names— "Hillbilly Feud" and "Superstar Wrestling."

The base games are IGT i-Game Plus multiline video slots in slant-top configuration, with graphics designed by Anchor. On top of each base is a top box incorporating a second, 14-inch LCD color video screen, powered by a separate, Anchor Gaming dedicated PC-based video system.

Each game has three separate bonus events. One is an accumulating bonus—a bonus jackpot accrues during normal play, until a special reel symbol lands and the player collects the bonus.

The other two bonus games are linked together. A reel trigger transforms the main video screen into a second-screen bonus game. Six locations on the screen hide bonus awards. The player chooses five spots.

Five of the locations hide bonus coin amounts, and one activates the third bonus game. If the player chooses that spot, the LCD screen transforms into a themed board game.

In "Hillbilly Feud," it's a race between the Hatfields and the McCoys. Characters from each family are paired off in a race toward the "still," collecting bonus coins along the way.

In "Superstar Wrestling," it's the male wrestlers vs. the female wrestlers, racing toward the championship belt.

IGT Conversion Kits

Also at the trade show, according to Adams, Anchor will introduce a collection of conversion-kit video bonus games produced for IGT S-Plus slant-top slots. According to Adams, the kits transform a bank of games into an "attraction" similar to the CDS "Monkey Business" game, with LCD video screens in each top box and an overhead, attract-mode video display.

First among these will be "Video Jeopardy!" A reel trigger in the base game will send the player into a bonus "Jeopardy!" game, but unlike the Megajackpots "Jeopardy!" slot, this bonus game incorporates elements of the real game used on the Jeopardy! television game show.

"It's the real, live game," says Adams. "You go into the Jeopardy bonus and up comes the game board. You select a category, and the computer selects a random bonus amount—such as 'Sports' for 30. Then, a real question from the category appears."

To keep the game based on random chance, the player is prompted to choose from three hidden answers by selecting one of the three "contestants" on the video screen. "Two are correct; one is incorrect," Adams explains.

Another new conversion kit is called "Roller Jam." According to Adams, the bonus game features live-action footage of the real "Roller Jam" television show, secured through licensing from the TNN cable network. "The bonus game is live-action video of the show," says Adams. "As you play the primary game, the screen plays live-action video highlights from the show, and there is a 'jam clock' superimposed on the screen. Every time you lose on the reels, time is added to the clock. Accumulating 60 seconds on the clock gets you to the bonus game."

He says this occurs every 10 to 15 spins. For the bonus round, the player selects a team member on the screen who is competing in the television show's "jam"—a rough-and-tumble race involving men and women on roller skates. Using a track ball, the player "becomes" the Roller Jam participant in the race, and the bonus amount corresponds to where the player finishes in the jam.

Other conversion kits by Anchor are designed to convert IGT S-Plus machines into Barcrest bonus games—the line of top-box bonuses designed by Barcrest, IGT's European subsidiary. "We go out and say, 'show us your worst-performing S-Plus machine,' and we convert it into a Barcrest game," Adams says.

All in all, it's a collection of new slot games diverse enough to make one's head spin. That is, until Anchor comes up with yet another new game collection for World Gaming Congress 2000. ♦

BACK BY POPULAR DEMAND.

It took a public outcry, and an act of Congress, to save the gray wolf from extinction. Now, the wolf is making a comeback, but it's not alone. Many other creatures face similar extinction. And unless we step up our efforts to protect their habitats, they may not be so lucky. At the Sierra Club, we've mounted an major campaign to defend the Endangered Species Act and preserve threatened habitats before their inhabitants are gone forever. Please contact us to find out how you can help protect threatened and endangered animals. Because no amount of popular demand can bring an extinct species back to life.
